

Gerry Myers is a lecturer in psychotherapy in the School of Education at the University of Limerick. He is also a practicing psychotherapist and psychotherapy supervisor. He lectures on existential psychotherapy, psychotherapy and the social domain, and critical thinking and reflective practice. He is currently the IAHIP representative on the Management Committee of ICP. He is Course Director of the MA in Integrative Psychotherapy at the University of Limerick.

The Door of the Therapy Room as Border? - In the turbulent Europe of the 21st Century has psychotherapy found itself in a fortress of its own making, focused on the private world of the client(s) within the confines of the therapy room? This “talk” will invite participants to think seditiously about boundaries as hard borders. The aim is to open up an exploration of the relationship between psychotherapy and society.