

Jean Manahan has over twenty-five years of experience at CEO level in the not-for-profit sector, with an extensive track record of leading organisations through strategic growth, transition and development. She is passionate about social justice and the role of advocacy in pursuing a more just society. She has a special interest in ageing, end of life, and the development of initiatives which transform culture, attitudes and enhance dignity at all stages of life. A partnership approach between service provider and user is central to her work which has also included refugees, children, families and overseas development.